ARUNDEL, England - 15 April, 2002

Futuremedia PLC Expands Service Capability Through Acquisition of Professional Services Company C2W Limited.

ARUNDEL, England, April 15, 2002 – E-learning solutions provider Futuremedia PLC (Nasdaq: FMDAY - news) today announced that the Board of Futuremedia and the Board of professional services company C2W Limited have agreed for Futuremedia to acquire C2W subject to approval by the shareholders of C2W.

C2W professional service business is expected to complement Futuremedia's core business and enhance the company's position as a single source provider of e-learning solutions. The proposed all-share deal values C2W at approximately 1.5% of outstanding Futuremedia stock. C2W will be integrated into Futuremedia and will operate as Futuremedia Professional Services. David Denley, presently Managing Director of C2W will take up the position as Director of Futuremedia Professional Services. Stephen Pillinger, presently a Director of C2W, will take up the position as Director of Operations at Futuremedia PLC.

Mats Johansson, CEO of Futuremedia, said: "C2W's professional service business is a key building block in our strategy to deliver integrated e-learning solutions. We have actively worked to engage with our customers earlier in their decision making process. To do this well we need to bring knowledge, specific to the business process, together with our e-learning expertise. C2W has substantial management expertise and contacts in the area of resource management, environment, property together with health and safety that will provide Futuremedia Professional Services with the first business- process specific practice." Mr. Johansson also commented, "As with our earlier acquisition of PalmTeach we have for some time worked with C2W and I expect our professional service business to grow rapidly and contribute positively towards our return to profitability within the coming three quarters."

David Denley, Managing Director of C2W Limited, commented: "The acquisition of C2W by Futuremedia represents a much needed opportunity to deliver knowledge management and e-learning to the environmental and property sectors. The demands being placed on industry through increased legislation and concerns about potential future liability issues highlight the need for companies to know more and to have greater access to reliable information." Mr. Denley also commented, "We believe that this acquisition will strengthen Futuremedia management, provide an excellent opportunity to maximize the capabilities of both organizations and will promote the development of improved industry standards."

David Denley has considerable experience of the waste management and environmental sectors having been the Environmental Affairs Manager for IBM Europe Middle East and Africa for over 13 years. He was also responsible for helping establish the first independent UK waste facility auditing association in the early 1990's. David brings a network of contacts across Europe which will enrich Futuremedia's opportunity of a total solutions provider to large corporates.
